Successfully tracking procedures and documentation

Law enforcement agencies handle an enormous amount of documents at any given moment. The documents concern requests or cases that need to be processed accurately. All these documents have to be accessible at all times to the responsible officers and employees. GoPro offers a unified system for cases and documents, which increases the efficiency in communication, electronically, between employees in different departments and offices and between the law enforcement agencies, Ministries of Justice and other institutions.

Increase level of service

One of GoPros' advantages as a system is that it can be used to monitor service, compliance and performance in connection with the FoIA. It provides contact tracking and workflow devices for managing requests, search tools that search existing electronic data and direct interaction with Electronic Documents and Records Management (EDRM) systems. These features make the system highly efficient as well as easy to use. GoPro can highlight problem areas, compile statistics, audit reports, manage appeals and retrieve information on different requests and cases. The solution is also a simple and effective way to convey information to the public using the Internet.

Metropolitan Police

The Metropolitan Police Service use the powerful GoPro solution to manage the workflow and the complete electronic records, management support. GoPro is an essential tool for MET to ensure compliance to FoIA

Founded in 1829, the Metropolitan Police Service is famed around the world and has a unique place in the history of policing.

Icelandic State Police

At the Icelandic State Police, GoPro is used for state criminal case handling and document management, for example, management for prosecution, correspondence with other justice departments or law enforcement agencies.

The position of National Commissioner of Police was created on 1 July 1997 when the new Police Act, No. 90/1996, entered into force, abolishing the State Criminal Investigation Police

The Icelandic Ministry of Justice

The Icelandic Ministry of Justice have deployment GoPro, a centralized case- and document management system for the ministry. All cases within the ministry are handled through GoPro case management giving the staff centralized access to all information, ensuring quality and efficiency in all case handling.

The main role of the Ministry of Justice is to uphold law and order and ensure that civil rights are respected.
